Biographical Note

Vida Chenoweth (b. 1929), is considered the first solo classical concert marimbist, and is known for her career as a marimba artist, as well as a linguist and ethnomusicologist. She served as a linguist and Bible translator in Papua New Guinea, where she worked with colleague, Darlene Bee, analyzing the Usarufa language, teaching Usarufa people to read, and recording their music. Chenoweth devised a method of ethnic music analysis during her years recording and studying Usarufa music. She has authored several books and academic journal articles on ethnic oral music traditions, and she developed the ethnomusicology program at Wheaton College Conservatory of Music based on her theories and analyses of ethnic music. Chenoweth and her ethnomusicology students documented the music and practices of cultures across Papua New Guinea, Africa, South and Central America, and the Southwest United States.

Scope and Content

Collection of papers and audiovisual materials representing the life work of ethnomusicologist Vida Chenoweth. Manuscripts, sound recordings, photographs, and films mainly of her work with the Usarufa and numerous other people in Papua New Guinea, but culture groups from other places are also represented, including Vanuatu, Indonesia, Solomon Islands, Cook Islands New Zealand, Kenya, Zaire, Ethiopia, Madagascar, Ivory Coast, Ghana, South Africa, Cameroon, Senegal, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Mali, Cameroon, Vietnam, Thailand, Laos, Cambodia, Mexico, Guatemala, Panama, Ecuador, Brazil, Peru, and the United States. They also include content from the South Pacific Festival of the Arts in Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea. LOC numbers and original identifiers listed below reflect the donor, Vida Chenoweth’s, numbering system. Contact reference staff for more information.

LOC numbers and original identifiers listed below reflect the donor, Vida Chenoweth’s, classification system to uniquely identify each geographic area and culture group. This classification system was applied to an earlier classification system that Chenoweth developed to track her collection of sound recordings and moving images. In this system, the format is identified by letter, then by year, and then separated by a slash and followed by a number indicating its chronology in the collection. Chenoweth’s LOC classification system references her sound recording and moving image classification system. Contact reference staff for more information.
